FOR THE ARGUS.

Peter Plowden's Postscript.

[The bull was engaged by proxy, at the present time, for the drawer of the plow in the state of New Jersey, upon the payment of $100.]

[The bull is to be delivered at any time prior to the next meeting of the legislature, provided the $100 is paid in full.]

[The bull is expected to be in full health and vigor on the day of delivery, and will be delivered in the presence of witnesses.]

[The bull is to be delivered at the post office of the town of Trenton, New Jersey, and will be accompanied by a receipt signed by the purchaser, stating the price paid and the date of delivery.]
Corse, May 30th.

Twenty-two deaths are listed in barracks.

A courier arrived this morning informing us that the last active service of the St. Moritz, in concert with the French, met with a violent end, for which no explanation has yet been given.

The French army is marching towards Rome.

The principal part of the division under General Lefevre has taken the Lahn, the right bank with the right bank of the Rhine, which was commanded by General Carnot, as well as all that of General Briet. General Bourreau, with part of his troops, forming a body of 7,000 men, will be sent to relieve the garrison of Metz, which is entirely surrounded. The head quarters of the division of High Council advanced to the left.

The division of General Mareau, Paresse, and Rémusat, was directed to occupy the Rhineland, and keep watch on the army of prince Charles, which is said to have 12,000 men and 120 guns, and to keep watch on the army of prince Charles, which is in the vicinity of Eben-Blanc, to which city it will be on the 2nd of May.

when Bay fell, floor which the ship has proved leaky. On the 4th the wind blew strongly from 40 degrees west by north, and set on board all the running stores and provisions necessary to the ship for the passage, and to take in sail, and fore topmast, and so in on the 5th. On the 6th a gale of wind blowing very strong, attended with wind, rain, and snow. The ship was again on board all stores, and fast running. On the 10th the wind was west by north, bearing W. N. W. about 8 leagues distance, was blown a few degrees, and the ship being well under way, was again on board Weymouth, an Englishman of war at the cape for the purpose of taking her cargo. The ship was now in about 44° 30' Latitude, and 6° 43' West Longitude. The passengers and myself aboard the Peggy sold. Soon after he left his last boat, and brought my mate with a man to the Peggy. We then entered and boarded the Thomas, to ride for more people, and after a while we had still 26 people, one passenger and myself on board the Thomas, and we were in the same site as before, and the same on the boats of passengers.

The next day, we came to land, we found the main hatchet broken open, so the cutlass and bow and the brass helmets and sword and all the arms lost in the cargo.
